

Marketing and Branding for Small Dairy Processors in the Northeast U.S.

12 Case Studies

June 2022

the goodpeopleresearch company™

NORTHEAST

DAIRY BUSINESS
INNOVATION CENTER

Table of Contents

Introduction	1
Purpose of the case studies.....	1
Research behind the case studies.....	2
The marketing environment/context for NE dairy processors.....	4
Categories of processors: three different types of brand story	4
Criteria for choosing cases	6
Telling the brand story in context.....	6
How to get the most out of the cases	7
The Case Studies	9
Case #1: Blue Ledge Farm.....	10
Case #2: Consider Bardwell	13
Case #3: Jasper Hill Farm.....	16
Case #4: Crescent Ridge Dairy	18
Case #5: Arethusa Farm	21
Case #6: Turner Dairy Farms.....	24
Case #7: Marburger Farm Dairy.....	27
Case #8: A.B. Munroe Dairy.....	30
Case #9: Shaw Farm	33
Case #10: Gifford’s Ice Cream.....	36
Case #11: Stonyfield Organic.....	39
Case #12: Cabot Creamery	42

Introduction

Visitors to the northeast U.S. know that the landscape is punctuated by dairy producers that offer something for all fans; the foodie on an artisanal cheese safari to the family that visits the same ice cream stand every summer for generations. While the northeast draws tourists from all over to its famous countryside, the region's dairy producers must work hard to grow and popularize their brands while focusing on the demands of their craft.

Smaller dairy processors perhaps have the greatest challenges when it comes to building a brand as they typically lack a dedicated marketing professional or team. At most small dairy processors, the owner/proprietor is likely also the head of marketing, or possibly a staff member can devote part of the week to posting photos to Facebook and Instagram and respond to customer posts. There's little time to learn about different marketing and branding approaches, much less execute them consistently.

The following are 12 case studies that describe how select dairy processors in the northeast United States¹ approach the task of marketing and branding their products. They are presented as a reference for other dairies that may be evaluating their own marketing and branding or planning to make changes in these areas. Mainly, they are provided so that the owners of smaller dairy processing businesses can have a reference for how others market and brand effectively, and decide how, if at all, they can apply the lessons to their own businesses.

Marketing

In this presentation we use the term “marketing” to encompass the steps taken to present the company's products and get them into the market to make sales. These steps may include, but may not be limited to, advertising, promotion, relationship building, social media interaction, as well as distribution through farmers markets, farm stores, online stores, and traditional distributors.

Branding

We define “branding” here as the steps taken to communicate an image of the company, which may include the design of the company's logo and promotional materials, including the company's website, as well as the language and storytelling the company uses to describe the distinctive role it plays in the marketplace or community.

Purpose of the case studies

The production of these case studies is sponsored by the Northeast Dairy Business Innovation Center (NE-DBIC) as part of a larger program designed to help the region's dairy businesses stabilize and grow. NE-DBIC hired the Good People Research Company (GPR), a Virginia-based consumer research and advisory firm, to explore the marketing and branding methods used by the region's dairy processors. Accompanying these case studies is a Marketing Toolkit, a resource guide that provides an overview of different marketing and branding opportunities and techniques.

Some of the case studies profile small companies and others feature larger processors that have dedicated marketing teams; these examples are provided to share practices that have had the benefit of being tested on a larger scale after more significant investment of time and resources and can still be adopted by a smaller company.

¹ For purposes of this presentation, the “northeast U.S.” contains 10 states: Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Vermont.

Dairy processors in the northeast U.S. can use these case studies for ideas about, and gain a benchmark for, their own marketing and branding.

Research behind the case studies

Dairy Processors

The case studies presented were distilled from a review of 135 dairy processors located in the 10 states of the northeast U.S. whose presence was detectable through an ordinary online consumer search of retail stores and search engines with a focus on the region; our staff assumed the role of consumers searching for dairy products produced in the northeast or attainable in the northeast from local retail locations, whether they be a grocery store, farmers market, online store, or farm store.

We distilled the list of companies down to 50, using a coding system that evaluated the processor on three levels:

1. Size – we used the apparent geographic reach as well as information from the processors’ web sites as a proxy for size.
2. Effectiveness of branding and presentation – we reviewed the companies’ presentation for clarity and consistency, as well how compelling the storytelling was.
3. The company’s apparent positioning (i.e., aspiration for their brand) – we evaluated whether the company appeared to be attempting to be a specialty product made in small batches, a supplier of staple products to a local audience, or a brand recognized and positioned to grow well beyond the region.

We then surveyed these 50 companies to learn more about them and their approach to marketing and branding and 23 companies responded. Of these 23, we looked for diversity in size, types of products, and geographic location, as well as differences in the mix of branding efforts (e.g., use of video, detailed storytelling, timelines, etc.) and narrowed our list to 14 companies, with the goal of completing case studies for 12 of the 14. In a couple of cases, we selected companies to explore that were on our list of 50 but did not respond to our survey. In these cases, we analyze their branding efforts independent of details they might report about their marketing operations.

Ultimately, the case studies presented are ones we feel are examples of marketing and branding that characterize the different approaches found across dairies in the northeast, and that offer a variety of approaches from which to learn.

Consumers

In June 2022, we surveyed 750 adult consumers (18+) about their dairy buying habits, their perceptions of everyday dairy brand marketing efforts, and the personal preferences they reference when evaluating a dairy brand for purchase.² 80% of the respondents reported they lived in the northeast or mid-Atlantic region of the U.S. In our analysis,³ we decided to focus on this geographic segment because 60% of respondents who shop in chain grocery stores reported it was at least “somewhat important” that the dairy products be from the region, and upwards of 85% or more of those who typically use an outlet outside of chain grocery stores feel sourcing from the region is at least somewhat important.

² Details about this research can be found in the Northeast Dairy Business Innovation Center (NE-DBIC) section of the Vermont Agency of Agriculture, Food, and Markets (VAAFAM) website (<https://agriculture.vermont.gov/dbic>).

³ We had oversampled for respondents from the northeast.

The findings suggest that 20% of respondents purchase dairy products outside of large chain groceries. A noteworthy pattern in the data is that those who purchase outside of chain grocery stores place a much greater emphasis on the “story” brands tell about themselves and their products, as well as the professionalism of the branding used on packaging and the producer’s website. Consequently, it is this audience – those who tend to purchase dairy products regularly outside of chain grocery stores – that likely constitute the core audience for small- to medium-sized dairy processors in the northeast, and they place emphasis on the story a dairy has to tell, and their branding efforts, far more than the typical dairy consumer. Further, the emphasis a producer places on telling their story registers as important as the “professionalism” of the brand’s web presence and/or packaging.

Survey respondents that report they shop for dairy products outside of chain grocery stores also report that being “local” is important at a significantly greater rate than do those who shop at chain grocery stores.

We interpret these findings as an indicator that what may differentiate smaller, more local dairy brands from competitors is “who they are” and how clearly and authentically they communicate their history and personality in a compelling, human way. When we looked at other survey responses, particularly to questions about the “type” of story or type of entity this core audience appears to prefer (e.g., small artisan, traditional multi-generation farm, or corporate brand), we find that stories of “traditional, multi-generation” farms are most compelling.

All this is to assert that a focus on storytelling – whether it comes in the form of words and paragraphs on a web site or is conveyed via Instagram images or package labels – is core to the branding small- to medium-sized dairies should focus on. The story of the brand, and what it symbolizes to potential customers, in many ways is the brand for many small processors as it represents a large part of the experience the consumer will have with the brand. This concept of story, which could perhaps be termed “backstory,” appears also to be central to the branding of large, corporate brands as we have illustrated by our including Stonyfield Organic (see Case #11 below) and Cabot Creamery (see Case #12 below) as part of our case studies.

As one might expect from a food item, the survey results also suggest that the product qualities themselves --- freshness, taste, purity, and health benefits – are critical to branding as well. It appears significant to use the right words in describing product qualities. However, controlling for product quality – ultimately paramount when it comes to dairy products – the impression created by the company’s story, along with the imagery it uses, ultimately positions the brand.

The marketing environment/context for NE dairy processors

The size and ambition of a dairy processor's goals will in large part determine how it goes about marketing and branding its products.

Producing dairy products beyond a certain volume threshold often requires significant resources and attendant liability (e.g., more land, larger herds, etc.); we found that most processors we spoke with and/or observed therefore focus on stable, gradual growth in business and, for administrative and expense considerations, limit their footprint to a local or regional scope. While many companies now have online stores and some have national distribution, companies with smaller staffs and less resources typically focus on local and regional sales.

And, in the case of dairy products, "local" and "fresh" are key selling features, further incenting companies to focus their marketing geographically. The possible exception to this, beyond offering sales online, is the potential for promoting outside the region, which most often is focused on agritourism, as well as products that may have longer shelf lives (e.g., ice cream).

Taken together, these factors suggest that the emphasis for marketing and branding for the companies we're focusing on is on building a regional reputation and customer base. Achieving national or in some cases, international recognition and accolades only enhances the brand's appeal and agritourism potential. The mainstay, however, for most companies in the region is to compete effectively within the region itself.

Categories of processors: three different types of brand story

Marketing and branding that is most effective begins with a vision for how the company sees itself and, therefore, the specific image and markets it wants to maintain. For this reason, we explored with a variety of processors the role they feel they play in the marketplace and what they aspire to be.

From our successive wave of observations, and in some cases interviews, we surfaced three main categories, or "archetypes," that describe different company's aspirations and, therefore, how they choose to represent themselves to the marketplace and consumers. We believe that these categories are not discrete; instead, the categories each describe the dominant company "persona," understanding that most processors will share some characteristics of each category. Ultimately, the story it tells about itself tends to place a company into a particular category.

We discerned that there are three primary stories told by dairy producers in the northeast which we describe below. They are what we call the artisan, steward, and corporate-advocate stories.

The Artisan Story (Craft-Forward: a story of "uniqueness and authenticity")

The artisan story highlights the craft of dairy product making more than the tradition of it. The artisan enterprise can often be family-run. It is usually a small or small-medium sized company. The dominant consumer target may be "foodies" or restaurants who want to be known for off the beaten path, discriminating taste, as in the tradition of a country or region in Europe, or for those who feel that dairy made in small batches, with greater individual care ensures a purer product. An emphasis on grass-fed/organic/humane treatment of animals usually comes with this category. The artisan story is one of uniqueness and authenticity, conjuring up artistic devotion and images of living off and close to the land and animals.

The Steward Story (Land, Animal, Tradition Forward: a story of “mission”)

The steward story is typically one of a multi-generation, family-run business, larger than an artisan processor, and often what one would consider a local institution. The focus is on the tradition of dairy product making. Stewards typically promote hyper-responsible practices for animals and land and fresh quality product for consumers, harkening to a time gone by when the world was simpler. Milk (and other products like butter and local non-dairy specialties), especially when delivered to the home and often a decades-old practice, characterize the steward processor. The steward story is one of mission, to protect and pass on the land and profession for future generations, demonstrating this ability by its de facto ability to have survived at times a century or more as a company, and/or by its demonstrable devotion to its animals and land.

The Corporate-Advocate Story (Brand forward: a story of “leverage for good”)

This category includes corporate leaning companies that may be big or small – the distinguishing characteristic is that they are focused on building a company and brand more than they are remaining local artisans, or stewards, although they commonly invoke that image as a selling point and very well may qualify in those categories. Corporate-advocates tend to be cause-driven corporations and therefore more brand- than product-forward.

The corporate category includes less established startup brands, often with playful flavor variations, aiming for national distribution. One finds ice cream or yogurt producers in this category often. The companies are usually larger entities which may once have been small dairies but who have built national and international brands, and who have greater market visibility. The corporate-advocate story is one of leverage for good, using the success of the company to care for suppliers downstream and for the social causes upstream.

We summarize the dairy processors in the following way, according to the brand stories they tell:

Category/Archetype	Emphasis	Brand Theme	Typical Ownership	Size	Geographic Footprint
Artisan Story	Craft	Authenticity/Uniqueness	Family + Entrepreneur	Small to Med	Local/Regional
Steward Story	Tradition	Mission	Multi-generation family	Med to large	Local
Corporate-Advocate Story	Brand	Leverage for good	Corporate	Med to large	Local, regional, national

Hybrid Categories

As mentioned, the categories outlined above – the artisan, steward, and corporate-advocate -- are not necessarily discrete; that is, most dairy processors will not fall completely into one category or another. Perhaps the most common “hybrid” category would be the artisan-steward, followed by the corporate-steward; most dairy processors understand that the health and well-being of their animals and the land is critical to the livelihood and to their ability to hand down their business to future generations or sell it at some point. While being a steward of animals and the land are a pivotal part of many dairy producer stories, we place companies the steward category that tell a primary story of preserving a specific tradition or way of life for themselves and their community and communicate artisanal impulses in other forms like quality and innovation. The squarely steward processors are mission-driven, and the primary mission is to preserve the dairy producer’s way of life and product indefinitely for generations.

Criteria for choosing cases

As suggested, dairy processors in the northeast U.S. are not monolithic; in evaluating the list of processors we initially compiled, one of the strongest considerations was to choose a set of companies that represented variety. We wanted to extract and learn lessons from each case, rather than present companies that all take essentially the same approach to marketing and branding. While some of the companies we present here look similar, there is something about their story, marketing approach, or the messaging they strive for around their brand, that distinguishes them and present a variety of lessons. Ultimately, we chose companies that told a clear story about the ethos that drives it.

Telling the brand story in context

When a consumer facing company markets itself successfully, its brand passes through four key thresholds: Awareness, when it is noticed by consumers; Evaluation, when it is defined in the consumer's mind; Use, when the consumer uses or consumes or experiences the brand and its products; and Promotion, when the consumer feels strongly enough about the value of the brand that they want others to use it.

Figure 1: The brand life cycle in marketplaces

In presenting the case studies in this document, we note the channels and techniques each processor uses to promote its brand and its products, so they get noticed; we then focus more heavily on the messaging and presentation the brand makes to shape how the consumer perceives and defines the brand. This definition leads to the choice to use the brand's products at the same time it provides a context in which the consumer experiences the brand. If this context is positive and resonates with what the consumer wants in their lives, they then tend to promote the brand. Having consumers promote a brand alongside a branding effort is the ultimate accomplishment a brand can achieve.

We selected companies to include in the case studies that appear to be successful at presenting a well-articulated image or story that assists the consumer in defining the brand and brand experience and, later, inspires the consumer to promote the brand. In the broader sense, we find that the processors featured here do an effective job of telling an artisan, steward, or corporate-advocate story.

Given this mindset in evaluating the marketing and branding of dairy processors in the northeast U.S., you will find in the case studies that we present results from our survey of companies along with insight we were able to discern from an analysis of the companies' marketing materials and, in some cases, opportunities to interview company principals. Our intention is to communicate the "secret sauce" that appears to make the company a good model from which other companies can learn and be inspired to reflect on their own efforts to have the marketplace define their brand in an intentional and positive way.

How to get the most out of the cases

For each case study, we provide some details on how the company approaches its marketing that come from the survey we conducted with company as well as from interviews (see Figure 2); this includes self-reported information about sales and marketing channels, and the way the company describes its own logo, messaging, and image. We recommend that readers use this information as a benchmark for what they are currently doing with their own companies and to gain ideas about channels or activities they may not have entertained before.

Perhaps most significant for the reader, by listening and observing, we attempt to isolate the key marketing and branding DNA that drives all the featured companies’ marketing and branding decisions. For each company, we spend time describing this essential element and how it threads through the company’s logo, packaging, web and social media design, and overall marketing direction. To get the most out of these cases, consider what you might adapt for your own business; you do not have to be “like” another company, nor have its resources or history, to be inspired by understanding what drives the peer company and how that is expressed in its marketing and branding. Think about what drives your company and how to communicate that to consumers.

One of the hardest things about building and maintaining a company, particularly in a competitive environment, is often the isolation from how others operate. In reading the following case studies, take advantage of this peek into how others tell their story, and use that perspective to understand better your own.

We provide website addresses for each of the processors featured in case study. We encourage you to visit them and observe for yourself what you might take from their approach.

SURVEY: PROMOTIONAL CHANNELS
Website	✓
Facebook	✓
Instagram	✓
Twitter
Pinterest
YouTube
Vimeo
Emails/Newsletters	✓
Online ads in search engines (e.g., Google, Bing)
Online banner ads on other websites
Ads in online newspapers, magazines, blogs
Ads in print newspapers or magazines
Booths at community events/festivals
Booths at food expos or trade shows
Enter products into food awards competitions
Sponsorship of local organizations (e.g., little league)	✓

Figure 2: Sample of "details" about a company's marketing from the processor survey.

The Case Studies List

Below is a synopsis of the case studies presented in this document. Each business was selected for a defining characteristic that peer processors can learn from, whether large or small. They are grouped by the categories described above.

Category	Processor	Products	Location
Artisan Story (Craft forward)	Blue Ledge Farm	Cheese (Goat & Cow)	Vermont
	Consider Bardwell Farm	Cheese	Vermont
	Jasper Hill Farm	Cheese	Vermont
Steward Story (Animals, Land, Tradition forward)	Crescent Ridge Dairy	Milk, Ice Cream	Massachusetts
	Arethusa Farm	Butter, Milk, Yogurt, Cheese, Ice Cream	Connecticut
	Turner Dairy Farms	Milk	Pennsylvania
	Marburger Dairy	Milk, Butter, Yogurt, Cheese	Pennsylvania
	A.B. Munroe Dairy	Milk, Cream, Ice Cream	Rhode Island
	Shaw Farms	Milk, Ice Cream, Cream	Massachusetts
Corporate- Advocate Story (Brand forward)	Gifford's Ice Cream	Ice Cream, Frozen Yogurt	Maine
	Stonyfield Farm	Yogurt, Cream, Milk, Frozen Yogurt	New Hampshire
	Cabot Creamery	Cheese, Yogurt, Cream, Butter, Cottage Cheese, Dips	Vermont

The Case Studies

Case #1: Blue Ledge Farm

Artisan Cheese producer in Salisbury, Vermont

Blueledgefarm.com

Products
Ownership
Staff Size
Marketing staff size
Facebook followers
Instagram followers

QUICK FACTS

Cheese (Goat and Cow)
Family owned, 1-2 generations
Fewer than 50
0
1000
2,650

BRANDING NOTES: Artisans building a simple, authentic brand that reflects their own artistic sensibilities and lifestyle. Web presence presents a personal, family narrative and emphasizes sustainability. Simple, friendly logo and packaging that tells a story and distinguishes product on shelf.

Who they are (their story)

Having met in Florence, Italy while studying art, Hannah Sessions and her husband, Greg, wanted a business that would allow them to live what they perceived as an “authentic” lifestyle and, at the same time, enable them to pursue their passion as artists. In 2000, they purchased Blue Ledge Farm and transformed an old cow dairy into a goat dairy. Two years later, they began making cheese.

Salisbury, Vermont-based Blue Ledge Farm currently has a herd of 150 goats. They also buy about 5000 pounds of cow’s milk each week from another farm. In all, Blue Ledge produces around 50,000 to 60,000 pounds of cheese annually, half from the cow’s milk, and half from their own goat milk.

Like many specialty dairies, Blue Ledge offers its products nationally and internationally via its website, but the company’s geographical footprint is primarily the east coast of the United States. The company uses distributors throughout Vermont, as well as in New York City and Boston. Distributors in New York and Boston in turn market their products throughout the remainder of the eastern seaboard.

What they want to be (aspiration)

The couple, now raising their family on the farm, 20 years in, look to build a brand that someone can acquire and continue, should their children not wish to. While they consider themselves artisans, their messaging is about sustainability of the land, their animals, and, not insignificantly, their brand. In the end, they see themselves as artisans-entrepreneurs as they are bent on building a brand that can sustain itself. In deciding how to position the brand in the marketplace, they focus on echoing simplicity and authenticity; their label is intentionally minimalist, and their messaging focuses on the land, animals, and sustainability.

How they market and sell their products (marketing)

Blue Ledge uses a variety of sales and marketing channels to bring both their products and brand to the public, including agritourism.

They stay on top of social media, posting photos and new products as they come. They have a farm store and an AirBnB offering to “stay on a working goat dairy.”

Focusing on a relatively small line of cheeses, they sell their products on their own farm and in other local farms stores, direct to restaurants and local retail groceries, and use distributors to extend their reach across the region. They also have an online store.

They strive to stay “relevant”

As a guiding mantra, Hannah and Greg strive not to light the world on fire with promotions but rather to stay “relevant.”

“We don’t want to disappear or become a brand that people aren’t excited about. We have to stay present. But it doesn’t mean we jump at every opportunity. We run an occasional ad in the newspaper. So maybe like twice a year just to stay you know, basically just to support our local newspaper and you know, maybe let people know about the farm stand.”

They maintain an email list

Just last year, Blue Ledge started doing more email blasts with a list of approximately 500 subscribers. Hannah sends out emails 3 to 4 times per year, noting that she has learned that the email list is one of the most important assets a company can have for marketing.

They offer fun merchandise

They offer merchandise – hats, hoodies, t-shirts – that feature their trademark blue and line drawing of the goats on the ledge. The models for the clothing are family members and staff.

SURVEY: PROMOTIONAL CHANNELS
Website	✓
Facebook	✓
Instagram	✓
Twitter
Pinterest
YouTube
Vimeo
Emails/Newsletters	✓
Online ads in search engines (e.g., Google, Bing)
Online banner ads on other websites
Ads in online newspapers, magazines, blogs
Ads in print newspapers or magazines
Booths at community events/festivals
Booths at food expos or trade shows
Enter products into food awards competitions
Sponsorship of local organizations (e.g., little league)	✓

SURVEY: SALES CHANNELS
Ecommerce on our website	✓
Ecommerce via another independent retail website	✓
Online at large retail website (e.g., Amazon)
A store on our farm or property	✓
A store on someone else’s farm	✓
Direct at local farmers markets
Our own store at a retail location
Direct to local retail stores	✓
Direct to local restaurants/hotels/institutions	✓
Direct to non-local stores in my state	✓
Direct to regional stores in the Northeast	✓
Via distributor to local stores, restaurants, hotels etc.	✓
Via distributor to non-local stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in my state	✓
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in the Northeast	✓
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. nationally
Home delivery using our own vehicles

SURVEY: AGRITOURISM
Offer tours of processing facility	✓
Have a store on the farm	✓
Have lodging for guests (e.g., bed and breakfast)	✓
Part of a “farm/dairy trail” type offering	✓
Guests can participate in processing products
Dedicated tasting opportunity on site
Local farm to table

SURVEY: IN-HOUSE OR PROFESSIONAL?	WE DO	HIRE A PRO	DON'T DO
Logo Design	✓
Website Design		✓
Website Upkeep	✓
Packaging Design	✓
Social Media Posts	✓
Advertising	✓
Booths at Food Shows			✓
Booths at Farmers Markets			✓
Search Engine Optimization	✓

How they tell their story (branding)

Website and social media

The Blue Ledge website uses visuals to tell the story of their dairy and to personalize the experience, all in line with an artisan-type “authenticity,” at the same time maintaining a clean, professional look. The site has a dedicated photos section that offers a personal look into the farm as the owners see it, including dramatic arial photos that show the farm’s layout and expanse from a bird’s eye view.

Logo and packaging

“We take a lot of care with the colors of our labels and that they're very striking to see on the shelf. We keep our label design very simple.” A look at the Blue Ledge label and web site signals that Blue Ledge is about simplicity and sustainability, a lifestyle business that puts “life” and “style” at a premium; “life” in the form of living things – the land, the animals – “style” in the form of the artistic nature of the work and products.

Brands are symbols; Blue Ledge’s branding symbolizes the family’s work. Line-like drawings of goats on a hill; blue symbolizing sky, and water, and trust. Images on the web site of their family and life on the farm suggest that joy is found in the everyday appreciation of the land, the animals, and the craft.

Why we like Blue Ledge Farm as a case study

With a logo and website that finds inspiration in the everyday life on the farm, Blue Ledge Farm tells a simple, cohesive story about life ensconced in a love of the land and animals. The owners bring you into their artisan world with photos of everyday life, sparking joy. Their branding is:

- Simple
- Authentic
- Personal
- Joyful

SURVEY: WORDS THAT DESCRIBE OUR LOGO
Humorous/Funny
Serious
Realistic
Cartoonish
Fun
Friendly	✓
Vintage
Old-Fashioned	✓
Classy	✓
Artisan	✓
Rustic	✓
Botanical/floral
Natural
Traditional
Artistic	✓
Clean	✓
Simple	✓
Boutique
Modern Wholesome
Healthy

SURVEY: INTENTIONAL MARKETING MESSAGES
Our family to your family
Generations of farmers	✓
We take good care of our cows/goats/sheep	✓
We take good care of the land	✓
We support the local community	✓
Small family farm	✓
Local farm to table	✓
Fresh	✓
No antibiotics/rBGH/additives	✓
Simple ingredients	✓
Highest quality/pure	✓
Nutritious	✓
Better tasting/delicious	✓
Local flavor or character	✓
Trusted neighbor	✓

Case #2: Consider Bardwell

Artisan cheesemaker with strong ties to NYC restaurants.
Revived centuries old co-op on Vermont farm.

considerbardwell.com

QUICK FACTS
Products	Cheese
Ownership	Entrepreneur owned
Staff Size	Fewer than 50
Marketing staff size	0
Production	N/A
Facebook followers	4,500
Instagram followers	6,500

BRANDING NOTES: “Consider Bardwell” is the name of the original farmer whose ancestry dates to 14th century Scotland. Current owners revived a co-op founded in 1864. Cheese positioned as premium artisan cheese to be served in restaurants, farmers markets, and specialty shops. While an artisanal cheesemaker, the company emphasizes its commitment to being a steward of the land and local community.

Who they are (their story)

Consider Bardwell Farm, in its current iteration, was born in 2001 soon after Angela Miller and her husband, Russell Glover, purchased a farm in Vermont to escape the bustle of New York City.

One day a high school student asked to visit the farm and interview the couple. The student informed Angela and Russell that their farm had been the oldest dairy cooperative in the area. Inspired by the history beneath their feet (and new home), the couple decided to revive the farm and name it after the farm’s original owner, a man from Suffolk, England named Consider Bardwell, who established the farm in the 1864.

With this unusual name and lineage as a basis, they ventured into the cheese producing business, and have employed local cheesemakers to guide their product, while Russell, an architect by trade, focused on developing the physical infrastructure of the dairy, and Angela, a literary agent who works with culinary writers and chefs, became the force behind the company’s sales efforts.

What they want to be (aspiration)

Over the past 20 years, Consider Bardwell has become a nationally recognized brand and has made its way into fine restaurants and specialty shops. Having caught the wave of artisanal cheesemaking in the first decade of the century, the company now sees itself as an established artisanal cheese brand, poised to be acquired by entrepreneurs who can preserve the quality of the product and continue to enlarge the brand’s reach. They also want their legacy to be a steward of the land and local community.

How they market and sell their products

They leverage relationships

Through Angela, Consider Bardwell has strong ties to NYC restaurants and shops and has used this channel to get several prominent restaurants and specialty shops to try the company's cheese line. As Russell points out, it's one thing to get a chef to try your cheese, and another to have them continue to buy it.

In some ways, having a highly visible chef or shop owner try your product may place undue pressure on your company's brand and reputation; if they like it, all is good. If they don't, then word may spread quickly and present a significant challenge to the brand.

Consider Bardwell sought out the finest local cheesemaker they could and committed to paying what was needed to make great cheese and build the brand. It paid off; while the Covid pandemic hurt sales as it did for most producers, the company's pre-Covid was one of rapid growth, particularly for a company founded by two individuals who had no direct prior experience in the business.

The company supported its reach into NYC and other areas by setting up small satellite operations, engaging young entrepreneurs who would transport and sell their cheese at green markets in and around the city.

They promote "mission"

The company appears to have drawn its energy from its commitment to its place in the local area's dairy history and the community they could build around that ideal.

Consider Bardwell places emphasis on and takes the time to explain how it is a "vertically integrated" company that has helped establish and continually supports local farms that supply it with its milk and how it has become a part of the regional land conservation effort.

A commitment to agritourism offerings further enables Consider Bardwell to tell its story to visitors and enhance the mystique that surrounds its colorful history.

SURVEY: PROMOTIONAL CHANNELS
Website	✓
Facebook	✓
Instagram	✓
Twitter
Pinterest
YouTube
Vimeo
Emails/Newsletters	✓
Online ads in search engines (e.g., Google, Bing)	✓
Online banner ads on other websites
Ads in online newspapers, magazines, blogs
Ads in print newspapers or magazines
Booths at community events/festivals	✓
Booths at food expos or trade shows	✓
Enter products into food awards competitions
Sponsorship of local organizations (e.g., little league)

SURVEY: SALES CHANNELS
Ecommerce on our website	✓
Ecommerce via another independent retail website
Online at large retail website (e.g., Amazon)
A store on our farm or property	✓
A store on someone else's farm
Direct at local farmers markets	✓
Our own store at a retail location
Direct to local retail stores	✓
Direct to local restaurants/hotels/institutions	✓
Direct to non-local stores in my state	✓
Direct to regional stores in the Northeast	✓
Via distributor to local stores, restaurants, hotels etc.	✓
Via distributor to non-local stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in my state	✓
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in the Northeast	✓
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. nationally	✓
Home delivery using our own vehicles

SURVEY: AGRITOURISM
Offer tours of processing facility	✓
Have a store on the farm	✓
Have lodging for guests (e.g., bed and breakfast)	✓
Part of a "farm/dairy trail" type offering	✓
Guests can participate in processing products
Dedicated tasting opportunity on site
Local farm to table

SURVEY: IN-HOUSE OR PROFESSIONAL?	WE DO	HIRE A PRO	DON'T DO
Logo Design		✓
Website Design		✓
Website Upkeep	✓
Packaging Design		✓
Social Media Posts		✓
Advertising	✓
Booths at Food Shows	✓
Booths at Farmers Markets	✓
Search Engine Optimization	✓

How they tell their story (branding)

Web site and messaging

Consider Bardwell’s storytelling successfully blends the “craft forward” element of the artisan narrative with the “revival of tradition,” “conservation,” and “community” aspects of the steward narrative.

Ultimately, we place Consider Bardwell in the artisan space; the “stewardship” theme in their storytelling supports the authenticity of the artisan’s craft, instead of vice versa.

But the blend of artisan and steward is effective: As artisans, the company places its cheeses front and center on its site and focuses on what’s unique about them. As stewards, they devote a good deal of space in the “about us” section of the site talking about their mission: as an example, they were the first dairy east of the Mississippi to be enrolled in the Federal Grasslands Reserve program, a designation given to only one farm in the U.S. each year.

Logo and packaging

Consider Bardwell’s logo and packaging incorporates a friendly set of animals, and an established date of 1864, the date the original farm was established. This date signals a steward-like ability to survive generations with the suggestion of generations to come. This blend of contemporary and established reflects the owner’s sentiment about honoring the land they purchased while modernizing the way the cheese will get to market.

Why we like Consider Bardwell as a case study

Consider Bardwell branding combines elements of the artisan story with the steward story, placing the uniqueness of their cheeses up front at the same time contextualizing the craftsmanship with a backdrop of honoring history and committing to the preservation of the farm for future generations.

SURVEY: WORDS THAT DESCRIBE OUR LOGO

Humorous/Funny
Serious
Realistic
Cartoonish	✓
Fun	✓
Friendly	✓
Vintage	✓
Old-Fashioned
Classy
Artisan
Rustic
Botanical/floral
Natural
Traditional
Artistic
Clean
Simple
Boutique
Modern Wholesome
Healthy

SURVEY: INTENTIONAL MARKETING MESSAGES

Our family to your family
Generations of farmers
We take good care of our cows/goats/sheep	✓
We take good care of the land	✓
We support the local community
Small family farm
Local farm to table
Fresh
No antibiotics/rBGH/additives	✓
Simple ingredients
Highest quality/pure
Nutritious
Better tasting/delicious
Local flavor or character
Trusted neighbor

Case #3: Jasper Hill Farm

20-year-old Northeast Kingdom, Vermont artisan cheese producer focused on promoting everyone from suppliers to store-based cheese mongers.

Jasperhillfarm.com

QUICK FACTS
Products	Cheese
Ownership	Entrepreneur owned
Staff Size	N/A
Marketing staff size	N/A
Facebook followers	18,500
Instagram followers	51,700

BRANDING NOTES: Highly polished web site with extensive education about the many facets of the cheesemaking process, with acknowledgement and appreciation throughout to the different contributors of their success, an approach that translates into communicating gratitude and trust. Impressive Instagram following using a variety of compelling, colorful photos.

Who they are (their story)

In 1998, two brothers, Andy and Mateo Kehler, bought “old Jasper Farm,” located on a rocky hillside in Vermont’s Northeast Kingdom. The farm sat nearby Caspian Lake, where the Kehler family had summered for more than 100 years. The brothers wanted to create a model for small-scale dairy farming that could offer more opportunities for Vermont’s “working landscape.” They called what they were doing “value-added agriculture:” the practice of transforming a raw material like milk into something more valuable before it leaves the farmer.

They built a creamery. They also created a cave ageing space for cultivating natural rinds as they observed that the highest value cheeses at the time were imported, European cheeses and they wanted to mimic those styles. They were able to market their first cheeses in 2003. They became part of the “American Artisan Cheese” movement and attracted the attention of Vermont-based, Cabot Creamery that needed an aging space dedicated to cultivating natural rinds.

Cabot has worked closely with Jasper Hill over the years. This collaboration is of a kind the Kehlers imagined when they spoke about Vermont’s “working landscape.”

What they want to be (aspiration)

The Kehlers want to continue to play a central role in building out a more robust collaboration in the region and leverage that collaboration into a regional identity.

How they tell their story (branding)

Jasper Hill tells a detailed story on its website, expressing gratitude and accolades for those with whom they work. They focus on the artisanal nature of their cheese while, like Consider Bardwell in case #2, they tell the story of how they leaned into reviving “the old Jasper Farm,” and in so doing, they became stewards of the land and the practice of cheesemaking.

Web site and messaging

Jasper Hill’s website and Instagram profile is replete with clean, high-quality images that match the quality of those on their website.

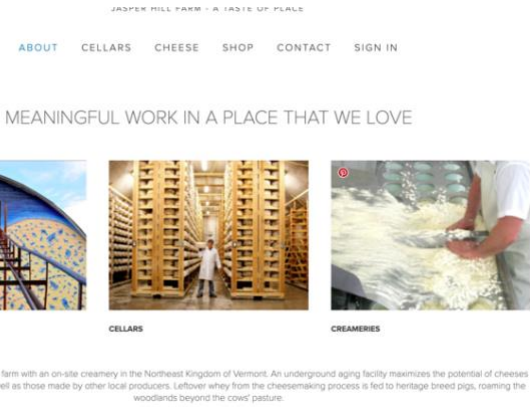

Logo and packaging

Jasper Hill does an effective job of encapsulating their artisan story in a one sentence, Instagram profile statement: “A Taste of Place. We make raw milk cheese from our own cows and ripen it in underground caves in Greensboro, VT.” From the striking square shape to the sophisticated and artistic font and muted blue and gold colors, the simple and tasteful logo reiterates the artisan message.

Why we like Jasper Hill Farm as a case study

Jasper Hill has transformed an old farm, revived it, and brought it into modern times with vivid photos and storytelling. With every representation of the farm and their efforts, they communicate a message of detailed craftsmanship with an authentic reverence for the art, people, and infrastructure that are part of the process. Together, their style of storytelling captures the spirit of community they are trying to create.

They use images and video effectively

With vivid, colorful images, Jasper Hill’s website walks the visitor through the various part of the farm, from a bird’s eye view of the barn and creamery to the pastures, to candid vignettes showing their cheese makers at work.

Case #4: Crescent Ridge Dairy

90-year-old southern Massachusetts milk and ice cream producer, steward with home delivery and famous dairy bar crescentridge.com

crescentridgedairybar.com

QUICK FACTS
Products	Milk, Ice Cream, Meat
Ownership	Family owned, 3+ generations
Staff Size	Fewer than 50 (80 peak)
Marketing staff size	2
Facebook followers	22,000
Instagram followers	5,876

BRANDING NOTES: Traditional dairy that leverages home delivery trucks for direct contact with customers and visibility as well as a fondness generations of families have for visiting its on-site dairy bar.

Who they are (their story)

Crescent Ridge Dairy is owned by a third-generation, farming family with a fourth-generation family member that now works for the company. Crescent Ridge does home delivery of their own branded fluid milk and ice cream. They also sell some meat under their own brand, and little more than 200 other local items via home delivery. As a company that delivers products, Crescent Ridge is poised to be able to deliver all types of products, and they are open to any product that makes sense within their portfolio.

In the winter, they currently have 15 truck drivers. There are approximately 40 full time staff that doubles during the summertime to 80. Crescent Ridge's main footprint is southeastern Massachusetts, one of the larger independent operations in that area. They consider their reach to be the greater New England region.

They have a strong wholesale business in bulk fluid milk and ice cream to grocery stores, including Whole Foods stores in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire.

What they want to be (aspiration)

Primarily a milk producer, the company's goal is to maintain a strong presence in the northeast. The company does envision growing nationally with its ice cream business, if possible.

The Covid pandemic brought more competitors into the home delivery business, but Crescent Ridge seeks to leverage its reputation as a steward of traditional dairy delivery and service to protect both its dairy business as well as the profits derived from delivering other products on their routes.

How they market their products (marketing)

They connect with tradition

Crescent Ridge leverages their long tenure with a focus on the symbol of the delivery truck and the Dairy Bar (crescentridgedairybar.com), an on-site retail store, stirring an image of days, and service, gone by.

The Dairy Bar itself has been around for more than 50 years and has built a kind of a generational following: “people remember their grandma taking them here to get ice cream. and now they're bringing their kids,” according to Crescent Ridge’s head of marketing, Robert McCarthy.

A nostalgic impulse is a product of their home delivery as well. “20-25% of the people who sign up say “hey, I got that when I was a kid! I want it for my family.”

They connect with people

Robert, as a dedicated marketing person, stays on top of social media, and has a staff person focusing on it as well.

If the company is being tagged in a story on social media, they’ll repost that story every day. Some weeks the company is on Facebook or Instagram every day, but most weeks at least 4 days per week monitoring activity and they tend to post around 2 times per week.

When they respond to social media posts, they do it with “the voice of a farmer,” says Robert. “You don't have to pretend you're something you're not but communicate with a voice that sounds authentic.”

The company’s delivery truck drivers also act as personal agents of the brand, interacting with customers daily, and extending the brand’s visibility as they move throughout the service region with company logo and messaging on the vehicles.

Robert points out that people who are looking for local food, want to interact with the producer who are making the product in any way they can. They have the benefit of home delivery drivers; home delivery customers get that same driver at their door every week, so the company can build a direct relationship with them.

SURVEY: PROMOTIONAL CHANNELS
Website	✓
Facebook	✓
Instagram	✓
Twitter	✓
Pinterest
YouTube
Vimeo
Emails/Newsletters	✓
Online ads in search engines (e.g., Google, Bing)	✓
Online banner ads on other websites
Ads in online newspapers, magazines, blogs
Ads in print newspapers or magazines
Booths at community events/festivals
Booths at food expos or trade shows
Enter products into food awards competitions	✓
Sponsorship of local organizations (e.g., little league)	✓

SURVEY: SALES CHANNELS
Ecommerce on our website	✓
Ecommerce via another independent retail website	✓
Online at large retail website (e.g., Amazon)
A store on our farm or property	✓
A store on someone else’s farm	✓
Direct at local farmers markets
Our own store at a retail location	✓
Direct to local retail stores	✓
Direct to local restaurants/hotels/institutions	✓
Direct to non-local stores in my state	✓
Direct to regional stores in the Northeast	✓
Via distributor to local stores, restaurants, hotels etc.
Via distributor to non-local stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in my state
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in the Northeast
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. nationally
Home delivery using our own vehicles	✓

SURVEY: AGRITOURISM
Offer tours of processing facility
Have a store on the farm	✓
Have lodging for guests (e.g., bed and breakfast)
Part of a “farm/dairy trail” type offering
Guests can participate in processing products
Dedicated tasting opportunity on site
Local farm to table

SURVEY: IN-HOUSE OR PROFESSIONAL?	WE DO	HIRE A PRO	DON'T DO
Logo Design	✓
Website Design		✓
Website Upkeep	✓
Packaging Design	✓
Social Media Posts	✓
Advertising	✓
Booths at Food Shows			✓
Booths at Farmers Markets			✓
Search Engine Optimization	✓

How they tell their story (branding)

Website and messaging

The Crescent Ridge website features the dual nostalgic versions of the home delivery truck and the Dairy Bar. From a branding standpoint, the site uses the theme of long tenure as a frame.

The “About the Dairy” page of the site prominently displays the words “Fresh. Local. Delivered.,” summing up the key selling points of the dairy, and features a timeline reaching back to 1932, celebrating the company’s 90 years in business.

As mentioned above, Crescent Ridge has a separate site for the Dairy Bar (crescentridgedairybar.com) which devoted exclusively to its ice cream and ice cream cakes.

Logo and packaging

Crescent Ridge uses a very basic, traditional logo featuring a cow and a large “C.” Its packaging is equally as simple, prominent positioning the “C” with the cow. The image of the cow peeking through the “C” dates to the company’s founding.

Why we like Crescent Ridge as a case study

Crescent Ridge has maintained a distinct advantage of having home delivery through which to reach and interact directly with customers weekly. While this appears to be an anchor for their marketing, along with their retail Dairy Bar, they follow through on telling their story of holding strong on tradition in a world where it may be easier to change.

- They tell a cohesive story – they’re committed to nostalgia and back it up with symbolism in branding
- They exude authenticity – they act and talk like local farmers

SURVEY: WORDS THAT DESCRIBE OUR LOGO
Humorous/Funny
Serious
Realistic
Cartoonish	✓
Fun	✓
Friendly	✓
Vintage	✓
Old-Fashioned
Classy
Artisan
Rustic
Botanical/floral
Natural
Traditional Artistic
Clean
Simple
Boutique
Modern Wholesome
Healthy

SURVEY: INTENTIONAL MARKETING MESSAGES
Our family to your family
Generations of farmers
We take good care of our cows/goats/sheep	✓
We take good care of the land	✓
We support the local community
Small family farm
Local farm to table
Fresh
No antibiotics/rBGH/additives	✓
Simple ingredients
Highest quality/pure
Nutritious
Better tasting/delicious
Local flavor or character
Trusted neighbor

Case #5: Arethusa Farm

Connecticut-based farm originally founded in 1868 purchased in 1999 as a land preservation project. In 2001, a new farm was born in the steward tradition. In 2009, the dairy began bottling milk.

arethusa.com

QUICK FACTS

Products	Milk, cheese, butter, ice cream, yogurt
Ownership	Entrepreneur owned
Staff Size	Fewer than 50 (80 peak)
Marketing staff size	1
Facebook followers	26,000
Instagram followers	30,600

BRANDING NOTES: More than a century-old dairy is revived with humble new beginnings and boasts a 20-year steady growth success story that includes an added retail location, restaurant, and a bevy of awards in competition.

Who they are (their story)

The owners of Arethusa Farm purchased the Litchfield, Connecticut farm in 1999, land that was slated for development after the original farm, founded in 1868, had changed hands years prior and the farm had been left to deteriorate. They purchased the property to preserve it as open space but had no immediate plans to revive the more than century-old dairy.

They were soon inspired to rebuild the historic dairy and began with 5 cows. They renovated the original barn and built new ones. Today, 300 cows inhabit the farm. They built a small dairy plant in what was the historic Bantam firehouse, striving to produce “milk like it used to taste.”

They then opened what was to become an award-winning restaurant Arethusa al tavolo in 2014 and, then a bakery, Arethusa a mano. Later, they added a second dairy store in downtown New Haven, Connecticut and a third location in West Hartford Center.

What they want to be (aspiration)

Current day Arethusa epitomizes the modern-day steward, infusing a contemporary flair to a traditional and vital community function. Their goal is to preserve what is rich and good about the past and make it interesting to new generations. In this way, the company is in and of itself a classic steward story.

How they market their products (marketing)

They institutionalize their culture and message

Arethusa has the strategic advantage of having a story to tell and multiple physical venues to tell it. Arethusa can reach customers and express its mission via its own retail outlets and restaurant.

This allows for a personal touch and an ability to extend the brand beyond milk, their core product. An award-winning restaurant, contemporary retail shops, a bakery, an historic farm – these are all simultaneously marketing, and branding vehicles and Arethusa appears to make the highest and greatest use of them, cross promoting each and featuring them in detail on their website.

SURVEY: PROMOTIONAL CHANNELS
Website	✓
Facebook	✓
Instagram	✓
Twitter
Pinterest
YouTube
Vimeo
Emails/Newsletters	✓
Online ads in search engines (e.g., Google, Bing)
Online banner ads on other websites
Ads in online newspapers, magazines, blogs
Ads in print newspapers or magazines
Booths at community events/festivals
Booths at food expos or trade shows
Enter products into food awards competitions	✓
Sponsorship of local organizations (e.g., little league)	✓

SURVEY: SALES CHANNELS
Ecommerce on our website
Ecommerce via another independent retail website
Online at large retail website (e.g., Amazon)
A store on our farm or property	✓
A store on someone else's farm
Direct at local farmers markets
Our own store at a retail location	✓
Direct to local retail stores	✓
Direct to local restaurants/hotels/institutions	✓
Direct to non-local stores in my state	✓
Direct to regional stores in the Northeast
Via distributor to local stores, restaurants, hotels etc.	✓
Via distributor to non-local stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in my state	✓
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in the Northeast	✓
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. nationally
Home delivery using our own vehicles

SURVEY: AGRITOURISM
Offer tours of processing facility
Have a store on the farm	✓
Have lodging for guests (e.g., bed and breakfast)
Part of a "farm/dairy trail" type offering
Guests can participate in processing products
Dedicated tasting opportunity on site
Local farm to table

SURVEY: IN-HOUSE OR PROFESSIONAL?	WE DO	HIRE A PRO	DON'T DO
Logo Design	✓
Website Design	✓
Website Upkeep	✓
Packaging Design	✓
Social Media Posts	✓
Advertising	✓
Booths at Food Shows	✓
Booths at Farmers Markets			✓
Search Engine Optimization			✓

How they tell their story (branding)

Website and story

The “About” section of the Arethusa web site is devoted to a timeline reaching back to the original 1868 farm and marking the milestones that have brought the company to its current incarnation. The timeline itself reinforces the Arethusa steward story, learning from and honoring the origins and inspiration for the modern enterprise while celebrating the way they have managed to preserve a gem for the community and make it a vital part of modern life.

Their language focuses on the “good taste” of the milk they produce while fusing the charm of the past with a contemporary experience in their retail outlets.

Logo

The Arethusa logo is solidly traditional in appearance, and intentionally presents a geographic identity, connecting with its Litchfield, Connecticut roots. The company itself characterizes the logo as “old-fashioned, classy, traditional, and boutique,” which summarizes its story and the manifestation of how it markets products through its own retail establishments.

SURVEY: WORDS THAT DESCRIBE OUR LOGO
Humorous/Funny
Serious
Realistic
Cartoonish
Fun
Friendly
Vintage
Old-Fashioned	✓
Classy	✓
Artisan
Rustic
Botanical/floral
Natural
Traditional	✓
Artistic
Clean
Simple
Boutique	✓
Modern Wholesome
Healthy

SURVEY: INTENTIONAL MARKETING MESSAGES
Our family to your family
Generations of farmers
We take good care of our cows/goats/sheep	✓
We take good care of the land
We support the local community
Small family farm
Local farm to table
Fresh
No antibiotics/rBGH/additives
Simple ingredients	✓
Highest quality/pure	✓
Nutritious
Better tasting/delicious	✓
Local flavor or character	✓
Trusted neighbor

Why we like Arethusa Farm as a case study

Arethusa Farm makes a great case study because it expresses the steward story in simple, personal terms, while presenting a model for how to extend a brand into different physical, modern locations. The company is intentional and consistent in its use of language and its decision to anchor its brand in the preservation and revival of tradition.

Case #6: Turner Dairy Farms

90-year-old western Pennsylvania steward dairy with more than 100 awards for taste and quality at competitions since 1998.

turnerdairy.net

QUICK FACTS
Products	Milk, Specialty Flavored Milk, Tea
Ownership	Family owned, 3+ generations
Staff Size	Large, 200+
Marketing staff size	2
Facebook followers	48,000
Instagram followers	10,000

BRANDING NOTES: Traditional dairy that focuses on freshness and flavor. Works with 35+ dairy farms within 70 miles of processing facility and all have a focus on caring for their cows and land sustainability. Despite winning international awards, focus is on local footprint.

Who they are (their story)

Since 1930, Turner's has operated a fluid milk business and is an example of a dairy focused on supplying direct to local stores, restaurants, and institutions using their own fleet of trucks and personnel. They have approximately 250 employees across three plants in Pennsylvania. Their footprint is roughly a radius two hours out of Pittsburgh.

Turner Dairy Farms partners with 35 local, family dairy farms located within 70 miles of its main processing facility, near Pittsburgh. The company has earned more than 100 awards for taste and quality at national dairy product competitions since 1998.

The company tells a steward's story: they have preserved a focus on the art of milk making, are locally focused, and have maintained a straightforward service to the community at the same time introducing milk to current generations with creativity in new flavors and twists.

What they want to be (aspiration)

According to Steve Turner, who runs marketing for the company, the company does not aspire to be a national brand but rather focus on delivering the highest quality product possible locally. The company's website asserts for Turner Dairy Farms "a Higher Standard of quality has always been at the forefront . . . Because we believe your family deserves it."

How they market their products (marketing)

They draw attention to a staple like milk with new ideas and flavors

Turner Dairy goes direct to stores and other institutions and delivers what they present as milk with “quality you won’t find anywhere else.”

A straightforward message, the company gains attention by innovating with different flavored milk and gaining widespread recognition for their products by submitting them to national and international contests.

They control their distribution

Turner Dairy uses its own resources to market and distribute its products, using outside professionals only for creative functions like logo, package, and website design. They don’t use outside distributors, likely in part because they focus on a relatively narrow geographical area.

The combination of reaching out to gain national attention for their products via contests, but restricting their distribution to local communities, further supports and solidifies the message that the dairy is focused on quality and tradition.

They use social media

Turner staff regularly post to Facebook, featuring different products and repurposing video to its more than 48,000 followers. They feature new products and remind followers of mainstay ones (e.g., iced tea for hot summer days) and promote merchandise with Turner logo and images.

The combination of locally focused, in-house distribution efforts with reaching out on social media helps to position Turner as a hometown institution.

SURVEY: PROMOTIONAL CHANNELS
Website	✓
Facebook	✓
Instagram	✓
Twitter	✓
Pinterest
YouTube	✓
Vimeo
Emails/Newsletters	✓
Online ads in search engines (e.g., Google, Bing)	✓
Online banner ads on other websites	✓
Ads in online newspapers, magazines, blogs
Ads in print newspapers or magazines
Booths at community events/festivals
Booths at food expos or trade shows
Enter products into food awards competitions	✓
Sponsorship of local organizations (e.g., little league)	✓

SURVEY: SALES CHANNELS
Ecommerce on our website
Ecommerce via another independent retail website
Online at large retail website (e.g., Amazon)
A store on our farm or property
A store on someone else’s farm
Direct at local farmers markets
Our own store at a retail location
Direct to local retail stores	✓
Direct to local restaurants/hotels/institutions	✓
Direct to non-local stores in my state	✓
Direct to regional stores in the Northeast
Via distributor to local stores, restaurants, hotels etc.
Via distributor to non-local stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in my state
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in the Northeast
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. nationally
Home delivery using our own vehicles

SURVEY: AGRITOURISM
Offer tours of processing facility	✓
Have a store on the farm
Have lodging for guests (e.g., bed and breakfast)
Part of a “farm/dairy trail” type offering
Guests can participate in processing products
Dedicated tasting opportunity on site
Local farm to table

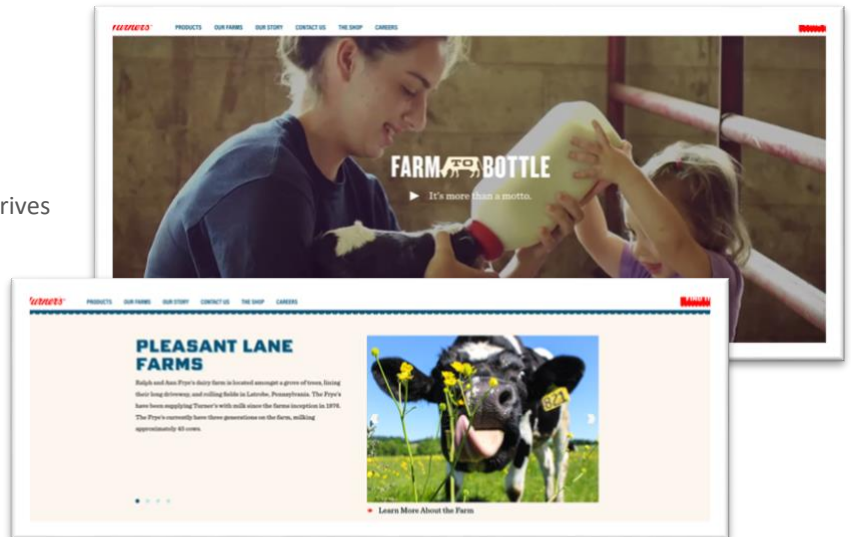

SURVEY: IN-HOUSE OR PROFESSIONAL?	WE DO	HIRE A PRO	DON'T DO
Logo Design		✓
Website Design		✓
Website Upkeep	✓
Packaging Design		✓
Social Media Posts	✓
Advertising	✓
Booths at Food Shows	✓
Booths at Farmers Markets	✓
Search Engine Optimization	✓

How they tell their story (branding)

Web site and messaging

In addition to asserting that the company strives for “quality you won’t find anywhere else,” Turner Dairy promotes the farms that supply them with milk as a central feature of their site. They use video storytelling to introduce the farms.

More than this, they feature the farms under an umbrella message “Farm to bottle: it’s more than a motto. A video entitled, “Farm to Bottle,” is presented prominently on the company’s website.

Logo and packaging

In keeping with Turner’s simple and direct approach to doing business, the company’s packaging features their logo and a drawing of a cow in a pasture.

The company itself describes its logo as “clean, simple, and modern.” The cursive font evokes the simpler time of the dairy’s founding and underscores the steward story.

Why we like Turner Dairy as a case study

Turner Dairy is a good example of a company that doesn’t try to do too much, staying in its lane and focusing on quality. Because of this, the company’s simple message of “quality” comes through clearly.

This simplicity and focus permeate everything they do:

- They restrict their footprint to the local area
- They sell direct to businesses and not the public, yet their brand has a loyal following with 48,000+ Facebook followers
- The stick to one product – milk – yet they innovate within the category with flavors and advances like extending shelf life

The discipline and focus of the company’s goals and practices drive the company’s marketing as well. The story is straightforward and relatable, and so is the messaging.

Case #7: Marburger Farm Dairy

85-year-old western Pennsylvania steward dairy, producing milk and offering a variety of tea products.

marburgerdairy.com

Products
Ownership
Staff Size
Marketing staff size
Facebook followers
Instagram followers

QUICK FACTS

Milk plus Tea, Juice, Eggs
Family owned, 3+ generations
Mid-Sized, staff between 50-199
0
10,450
0

BRANDING NOTES: Traditional dairy with simple website, featuring passing reference to awards (buttermilk) and its inclusion in the History Channels “Food Tech” series.

Who they are (their story)

Marburger Farm Dairy is an interesting case to compare with Turner Dairy in Case #6. Similarly situated in western Pennsylvania (Evans City), the Marburger Farm dates to 1938 when George Marburger, a German immigrant purchased the 100-acre parcel of land to use for raising draft horses.

His son Adam later began dairy production on the property. Since then, three generations of the Marburger family have operated the dairy.

The dairy is locally focused and has maintained a simple and traditional look and feel to its website and packaging.

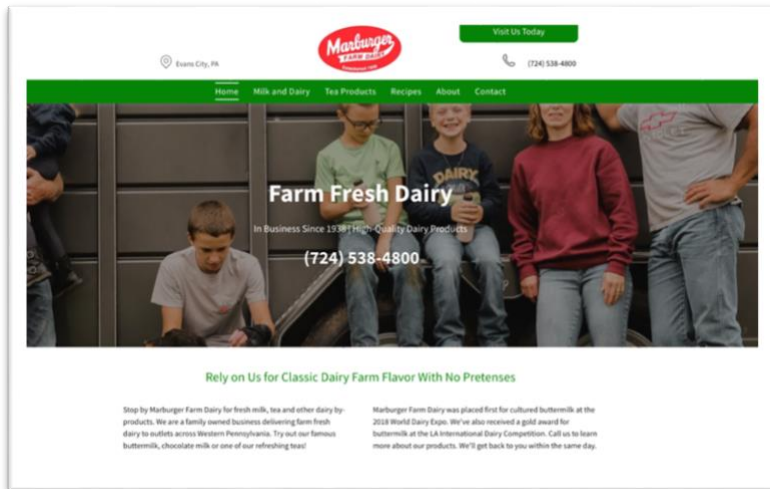

What they want to be (aspiration)

Based on Marburger’s promotional material, including its website, the company appears to have found its niche as a local milk provider that embraces tradition and nostalgia. While the company promotes awards it has received for its buttermilk in national competitions, and its being featured on the History Channel’s Food Tech program, the story Marburger communicates is that it is somewhat of a throwback to a bygone era and that’s a good thing.

How they market their products (marketing)

They make it clear who they are and focus on local

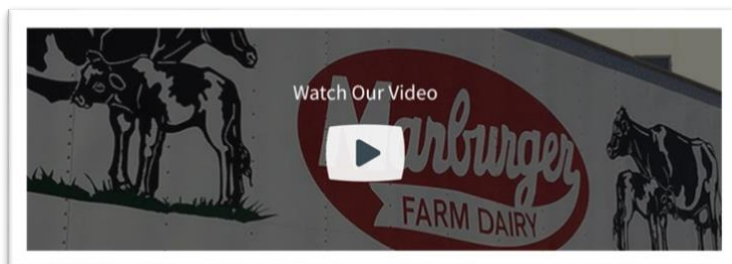

The first message you read on the Marburger site is “Rely on Us for Classic Dairy Farm Flavor with No Pretenses.”

The striking theme that runs through Marburger marketing and branding materials is the simplicity and unapologetic plainness to its presentation. As you can see from the tables to the right, the company’s response to our survey indicates that they do a good bit of promotion and advertising, as well as work with distributors to supplement their own distribution.

The company also invites website users to “visit us” and maintains its own store on the dairy property. This invitation to interact directly with the family at its dairy is cemented with a home page video that simply instructs visitors to “watch our video.”

The video itself is a simple, straightforward rotation of photos with a narrator that touts Marburger’s quality and local availability, digressing only to tout its award-winning buttermilk. The video closes with phone numbers, and address, and the website address, with the narrator inviting viewers to visit the farm. It appears to be an ad that we developed for local TV and the Web, repurposed for the Marburger site.

SURVEY: PROMOTIONAL CHANNELS
Website	✓
Facebook	✓
Instagram
Twitter
Pinterest
YouTube
Vimeo
Emails/Newsletters	✓
Online ads in search engines (e.g., Google, Bing)	✓
Online banner ads on other websites
Ads in online newspapers, magazines, blogs	✓
Ads in print newspapers or magazines	✓
Booths at community events/festivals	✓
Booths at food expos or trade shows	✓
Enter products into food awards competitions	✓
Sponsorship of local organizations (e.g., little league)	✓

SURVEY: SALES CHANNELS
Ecommerce on our website
Ecommerce via another independent retail website
Online at large retail website (e.g., Amazon)
A store on our farm or property	✓
A store on someone else’s farm
Direct at local farmers markets
Our own store at a retail location
Direct to local retail stores	✓
Direct to local restaurants/hotels/institutions	✓
Direct to non-local stores in my state	✓
Direct to regional stores in the Northeast	✓
Via distributor to local stores, restaurants, hotels etc.	✓
Via distributor to non-local stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in my state	✓
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in the Northeast	✓
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. nationally	✓
Home delivery using our own vehicles	✓

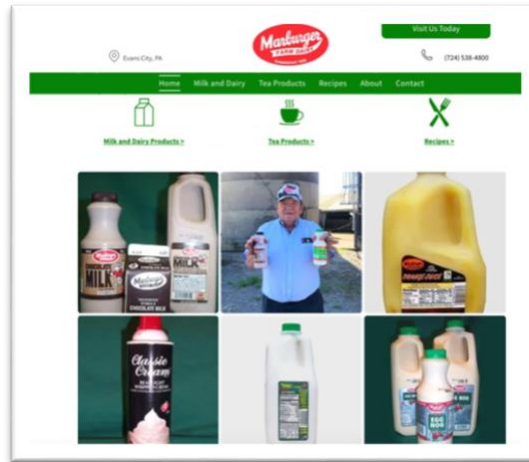

SURVEY: AGRITOURISM
Offer tours of processing facility
Have a store on the farm	✓
Have lodging for guests (e.g., bed and breakfast)
Part of a “farm/dairy trail” type offering
Guests can participate in processing products
Dedicated tasting opportunity on site
Local farm to table

SURVEY: IN-HOUSE OR PROFESSIONAL?	WE DO	HIRE A PRO	DON'T DO
Logo Design	✓
Website Design	✓
Website Upkeep	✓
Packaging Design	✓
Social Media Posts	✓
Advertising	✓
Booths at Food Shows	✓
Booths at Farmers Markets	✓
Search Engine Optimization			✓

How they tell their story (branding)

Website and messaging

Marburger’s storytelling is plain and direct. The website home page features non-filtered, unadulterated photos of products, with family members and staff as “models.”

The presentation of products and family members in this manner reinforces its commitment to the way things “used to be.” To customers looking for sincerity and a commitment to the product over the presentation, Marburger Farm Dairy stands out as a charmed reminder of simpler times.

Logo and packaging

In keeping with Marburger’s minimalist style, the company describes its own logo and packaging as “serious,” “old-fashioned,” “traditional,” “vintage,” “clean,” and “wholesome.”

This is an authentic representation of the company that appears to act and speak with a single, traditional voice throughout its marketing and branding.

SURVEY: WORDS THAT DESCRIBE OUR LOGO
Humorous/Funny
Serious	✓
Realistic
Cartoonish
Fun
Friendly
Vintage	✓
Old-Fashioned	✓
Classy
Artisan
Rustic
Botanical/floral
Natural
Traditional	✓
Artistic
Clean	✓
Simple
Boutique
Modern
Wholesome	✓
Healthy

SURVEY: INTENTIONAL MARKETING MESSAGES
Our family to your family	✓
Generations of farmers	✓
We take good care of our cows/goats/sheep	✓
We take good care of the land	✓
We support the local community	✓
Small family farm	✓
Local farm to table	✓
Fresh	✓
No antibiotics/rBGH/additives	✓
Simple ingredients	✓
Highest quality/pure	✓
Nutritious	✓
Better tasting/delicious	✓
Local flavor or character	✓
Trusted neighbor	✓

Why we like Marburger Farm Dairy as a case study

Marburger is a great example of a contemporary company that simply has held onto its roots and has not seen the need or advantage to change its image. The company is a true steward not only of a traditional milk producing process, but even more noteworthy of a marketing and branding ethos – what you see is what you get.

Case #8: A.B. Munroe Dairy

140-year-old Rhode Island milk producer, steward with home delivery as a mainstay service.

cowtruck.com

QUICK FACTS

Products	Milk, Ice Cream, Meat
Ownership	Family owned, 3+ generations
Staff Size	Small-medium: 51-200
Marketing staff size	N/A
Facebook followers	10,400
Instagram followers	1,725

BRANDING NOTES: Traditional dairy that leverages home delivery trucks for direct contact with customers. Engaging website with video and full variety of products from dairy to meat and poultry that be ordered directly from the site.

Who they are (their story)

A.B. Munroe is a small, private, family-owned dairy in business since 1881 and owned by the Armstrong family since the 1930s. They have even occupied the same address on Brow Street in East Providence for the duration. Translating their steward philosophy into words, their tagline is “Some things are better left unchanged.” They regard themselves as preserving a family tradition by continuing to focus on home (and office) delivery -- direct-to-your-door service of fresh milk. Customers can customize delivery options ranging from leaving items in an insulated container on a porch to delivery people entering the house and placing the groceries in the refrigerator. Munroe Dairy guarantees the milk is fresh from the cow to the customer in no more than 48 hours and contains no artificial hormones or antibiotics. They continue to use old-fashioned reusable glass bottle packaging as well.

However, not everything they do is dictated by the past. They now rely on a website for online ordering, not only of their products but over two hundred other grocery items that are sourced mostly from other local, family-owned New England companies. Customers can order online up until midnight for next-day delivery.

What they want to be (aspiration)

Their aspirations appear to be focused on stability and local growth in support of local businesses and farms, all using the same model that has been successful for them to date. According to their website, they serve close to 12,000 homes weekly, with milk representing 50% of the business. In fact, due to a huge increase in COVID-caused demand for home grocery delivery, they currently have a waiting list and are expanding their delivery routes and service areas as they can add office and warehouse staff, receive backordered custom delivery trucks, and upgrade necessary infrastructure.

Though unstated in their marketing materials, this plan could be described as “if it ain’t broke, don’t fix it.”

Munroe Dairy reiterates their growth plan through a strong steward lens:

“All processing and bottling is done at our plant and has been done here for the past 137 years. The success of the company has been its commitment to just do home delivery. Many of our products are not available in any store, and we support local food suppliers whenever possible. By doing this we offer a direct connect to you, the customer. We also believe that we can keep better control of the product if it is handled by our own delivery personnel in our own trucks. Our milk comes from local family-owned farms. It is not trucked in from huge factory farms and is not adulterated with additives, stabilizer, or synthetics. We feel that our dedication to providing quality products and friendly service has been the reason for 137 years of success.”

How they market their products (marketing)

They leverage home delivery

They grow within their existing business: home delivery. As their president, Rob Armstrong says in a video on their website, “Milk gets us in the door.” They can then market additional products to their customers additional products and expand their business.

A fleet of branded delivery trucks with uniformed delivery people present on the roads and in neighborhoods is another traditional way of marketing their products and services.

They connect with people

Munroe maintains an active online presence on Facebook, as well as Twitter, Instagram, YouTube, and Pinterest. Posts feature their products, along with new grocery products available for order, and ways their company supports and engages the local community. For example, they sponsor and participate in local events such as parades. Pictures are then featured on their Facebook and other social media pages.

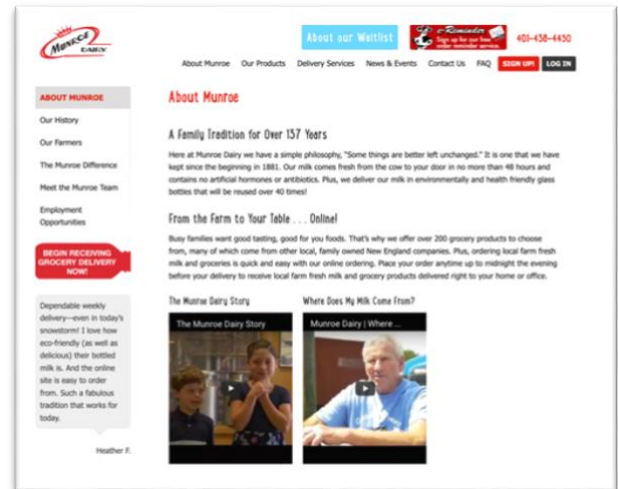

Munroe Dairy also operates Sacred Cow Scoop Shop and Market at their headquarters in E. Providence. Customers can buy Munroe ice cream, milk, and many other local products. The Scoop Shop also has a food truck that can sell their ice cream at special events.

How they tell their story (branding)

Web site and Messaging

The website is informative and includes photos of the family owners, information about the local dairy farmers they source from, recipe ideas, and lots of positive customer reviews. They also have a history of supporting local causes and events and their website hosts a form for event or donation requests. Finally, a link to their online store allows customers to shop for over 200 products online and provides easy access to customer service assistance with orders.

Munroe Dairy executives describe their company and business using the following terms: “practical luxury,” “family,” “we care,” “icon,” and “industry leader.”

Logo and packaging

Munroe’s logo highlights its long history by incorporating the dairy’s founding date of 1881 directly into the design. The font, colors, and crown design evoke tradition and history, suggestive of an old-fashioned 1950’s era drive-in diner.

The use of reusable glass bottles harkens back to the past, emphasizing quality, old-fashioned tradition, as well as an environmental ethic of reuse/recycle. They also suggest that glass is a healthy packaging alternative.

Why we like A.B. Munroe as a case study

AB Munroe tells a steward story – in everything from their logo to their use of family members, home delivery, and traditional, retro images, the dairy does its best to preserve the honored traditions of the past and instill a sense of consistency in daily life.

Case #9: Shaw Farm

115-year-old northern Massachusetts milk and ice cream producer, steward with home delivery and farm store

shawfarm.com

QUICK FACTS
Products	Milk, Cream, Ice Cream + local products
Ownership	Family owned, 1-2 generations
Staff Size	Small, fewer than 50
Marketing staff size	1
Facebook followers	12,000
Instagram followers	480

BRANDING NOTES: Traditional dairy that leverages home delivery trucks for direct contact with customers and visibility as well as a farm store offering a variety of local products. All products available for home delivery. Heavy promotion of ice cream brand.

Who they are (their story)

Shaw Farm is a multi-generational family dairy farm that exudes the very essence of the steward tradition. Warren Shaw, the current proprietor, sees the continuation of the dairy for the family and community as a duty and a service as much as it is a mainstay business.

In that vein, the dairy prides itself on its survival and the priorities it sets to accomplish that. Shaw Farms operates a store on the farm and provides home delivery. It promotes the processes and, importantly, the individuals who contribute to that process.

Warren is also active as a mentor to other farmers and dairy producers in Massachusetts. He serves on the Agriculture Land Preservation Committee for the state and is also a local radio host.

What they want to be (aspiration)

Shaw Farms has positioned itself as a model of traditional farming and dairy production in Massachusetts and seeks to continue that role, including mentoring other farmers along with growing its own product line and expanding the reach of its ice cream brand outside of the local area.

How they market their products (marketing)

Website

The website is nice, simple, friendly, and informative. By modern standards, the casual user might think the Shaw Farm website could use some updating; but the plainness and simple presentation speaks to the charm of bygone days and that seems to be what Shaw Farm is all about.

The Farm Store

The Shaw Farm Store is positioned as the center point of the Shaw Farm operation – you can visit directly, or you can have products delivered to your home if you live within the company’s delivery area (see below): dairy, meat, produce, bakery, and assorted other products. Shaw Farm can supply you with a variety of essential food products.

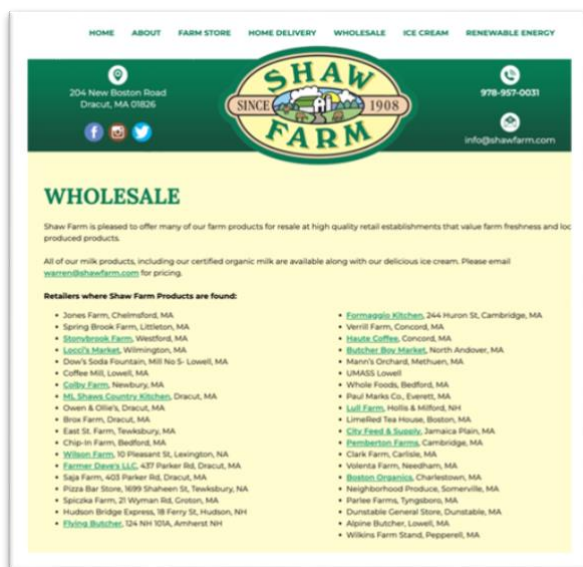

Shaw Farm milk is also available at other local farm stands.

Home Delivery

The Home Delivery section of the site makes the delivery areas clear and allows you sign up for home delivery.

Wholesale/Retail

Shaw Farms products can be found at over 20 retailers and restaurants in Massachusetts, including at least one Whole Foods location. These are listed on their website.

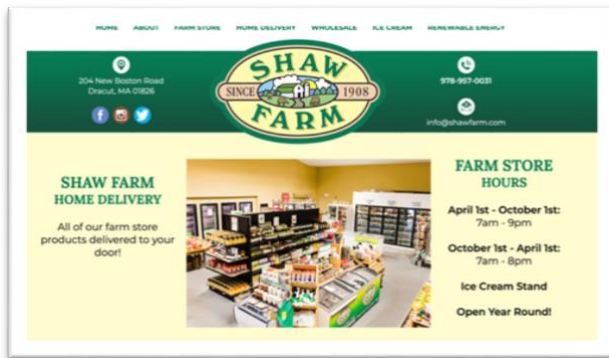

SURVEY: PROMOTIONAL CHANNELS
Website	✓
Facebook	✓
Instagram
Twitter
Pinterest
YouTube
Vimeo
Emails/Newsletters	✓
Online ads in search engines (e.g., Google, Bing)	✓
Online banner ads on other websites
Ads in online newspapers, magazines, blogs	✓
Ads in print newspapers or magazines	✓
Booths at community events/festivals
Booths at food expos or trade shows
Enter products into food awards competitions
Sponsorship of local organizations (e.g., little league)

SURVEY: SALES CHANNELS
Ecommerce on our website	✓
Ecommerce via another independent retail website
Online at large retail website (e.g., Amazon)
A store on our farm or property	✓
A store on someone else’s farm	✓
Direct at local farmers markets
Our own store at a retail location
Direct to local retail stores	✓
Direct to local restaurants/hotels/institutions
Direct to non-local stores in my state	✓
Direct to regional stores in the Northeast
Via distributor to local stores, restaurants, hotels etc.
Via distributor to non-local stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in my state
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in the Northeast
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. nationally
Home delivery using our own vehicles	✓

SURVEY: AGRITOURISM
Offer tours of processing facility
Have a store on the farm	✓
Have lodging for guests (e.g., bed and breakfast)
Part of a “farm/dairy trail” type offering
Guests can participate in processing products	✓
Dedicated tasting opportunity on site	✓
Local farm to table

SURVEY: IN-HOUSE OR PROFESSIONAL?	WE DO	HIRE A PRO	DON'T DO
Logo Design	✓
Website Design	✓
Website Upkeep	✓
Packaging Design	✓
Social Media Posts	✓
Advertising	✓
Booths at Food Shows	✓
Booths at Farmers Markets	✓
Search Engine Optimization			✓

How they tell their story (branding)

Web site and Messaging

The Shaw Farm website is reflective of the company’s straightforward, transparent approach to producing and selling products. Everything you might want to know is right on the top part of the home page (except for the detail provided about the people and process involved in the company’s “supply chain,” (that’s provided in the “About” section).

Farm store hours are listed right at the top, as is the fact that you can get any product from the store delivered to your home. The links available indicate that you can also order wholesale and find out where to get Shaw products at your local store in Massachusetts.

This simple, direct approach to providing information is part of what communicates brand; the simplicity reinforces transparency and the proactive steps the dairy will take to give customers what they need.

Logo and Packaging

The logo is friendly and simple. We see the use of a cartoon-like visual of a farm that feels safe and fun and the “1908” founding date that lends credibility and gravitas to the brand.

Shaw Farm milk can be purchased in quart glass bottles in a nod to traditional milk packaging but is also sold in plastic bottles of various sizes.

SURVEY: INTENTIONAL MARKETING MESSAGES
Our family to your family	✓
Generations of farmers	✓
We take good care of our cows/goats/sheep
We take good care of the land
We support the local community	✓
Small family farm	✓
Local farm to table
Fresh
No antibiotics/rBGH/additives
Simple ingredients
Highest quality/pure
Nutritious
Better tasting/delicious
Local flavor or character
Trusted neighbor

Why we like Shaw Farm as a case study

Shaw Farm is a model for telling the steward story. The messaging is about the process of making milk and the foundation provided it by the land, the people, and their commitment. From a messaging point of view this approach translates to something that engages the consumer who is looking for something to believe in when it comes to supporting a food provider. It motivates the consumer to support and promote the brand.

Case #10: Gifford's Ice Cream

120-year-old Maine ice cream producer that weaves a traditional family story into a modern corporate brand.

giffordsicecream.com

QUICK FACTS
Products	Ice Cream, Frozen Yogurt
Ownership	Family owned, 5 generations
Staff Size	Mid-sized; 51-200
Marketing staff size	1+
Facebook followers	66,000
Instagram followers	7,900

BRANDING NOTES: Modern, fun ice cream brand that traces its roots to a 19th century dairy farm with a first retail location opening in 1980. Polished, professional website using the company's history to anchor what could be mistaken for a completely new brand.

Who they are (their story)

Navigate to the "About" page of the Gifford's Ice Cream website, and you're greeted with the headline, "With Gifford's, Ice Cream is Family." Rooted in a family milk and ice cream delivery business begun in the late 1800s, Gifford's Ice Cream was founded by Audrey and Randall Gifford in New England on a small Maine dairy farm using family recipes. Almost fifty years later, Giffords is a fifth-generation, family-owned company that sources its fresh milk and cream exclusively from independent family farms and uses antique Cherry Burrell freezers to slow churn its more than 100 unique flavors of ice cream, frozen yogurt, sorbets, and sherbet. The award-winning company sells over 2 million gallons of ice cream annually in supermarkets, shops, institutions, and restaurants throughout the Eastern United States from Maine to Virginia and in select states as far west as Illinois. They also operate five ice cream stands in Maine.

What they want to be (aspiration)

Giffords Ice Cream draws strength from its Maine roots, using it to branch out more widely as it aims for a national presence. While still maintaining their ice cream stands in Maine, the fact that they have pursued partnerships with regionally based national brands such as Maine-based L.L. Bean and the New England and Boston professional sports teams demonstrates their desire to grow within and beyond New England.

However, they are consistent in maintaining the business as a family operation and in keeping their Maine corporate location and local sourcing of milk.

How they market their products (marketing)

They connect with tradition

Giffords' seasonal summer ice cream stands in Maine are a clear reference to their traditional, small-town New England past. A summer visit to the local ice cream stand is a real Maine tradition, and Gifford's New England and Maine-themed flavors also contribute to the tradition.

They partner to expand their range

Partnerships with big and famous regional brands (sports teams, legendary retailer L.L. Bean) also tie Giffords' history to the traditions of those brands. At the same time, this enables Giffords to reach thousands of potential new regional and national customers who follow New England sports teams, for example.

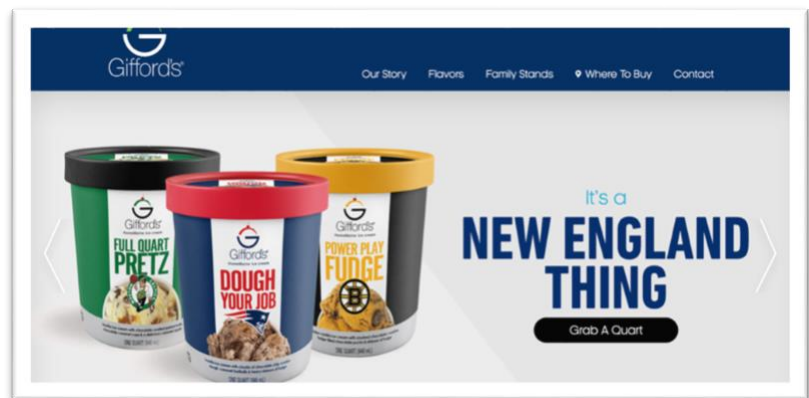

Expansion along the Eastern seaboard and westward into the Midwest means reaching out to new customers who may never have heard of Giffords or have been to an ice cream stand in Maine, necessitating a reliance on the story of the family-run nature of the company and the traditional New England history. Gifford's coined phrase, "HomeMaine Ice Cream" reiterates and helps to sell this story. It confers authenticity, freshness, and quality that could persuade new customers to try their product.

They connect with people

Giffords offers a monthly newsletter for fans, along with an extremely robust Facebook presence, as well as social engagement on Instagram, Twitter, and Pinterest. Samantha (Gifford) Plourd, a fifth-generation family member, is the company's Marketing Manager.

To grow their Instagram following and publicize their new flavor "Full Quart Pretz" commemorating the new partnership with the Boston Celtics, Gifford's offered a Sweepstakes where entry involved engaging with Giffords on Instagram and offered a year's worth of ice cream as a prize.

New England teams have numerous and passionate fans, and the social media campaign asking people to post photos of themselves in team gear while eating Gifford's ice cream likely generated a huge amount of publicity for Gifford's.

How they tell their story (branding)

Web site and messaging

The website is professional, simple, and clean. Nothing is there that doesn't need to be there. The company's history is presented up front with lots of black and white photos, but a timeline brings us up to the present by showcasing significant growth events and updated branding. There is a short description of the ice cream making process and the newest generation of Giffords who run the company. A page presenting the 100+ ice cream flavors includes tempting pictures of each flavor, and each of the five ice cream stands has its own page with information and events. A "where to buy" page and a "Contact Us" page round out the main website offerings.

Though there is plenty there to honor Gifford's past, as the site content demonstrates, this brand is not primarily interested in telling a steward or advocate story – there is little to no information about maintaining family farms, how the cows are treated and which farms the milk comes from, or the importance of organic ingredients.

Logo and packaging

The Giffords branding and logo are completely modern, evoking a bowl of ice cream with a cherry on top and a spare, angular, modern font. There is no hearkening back to the past, and despite strong Maine roots there is no rural or farm feel. Previously, the branding on the packaging presented an earthy, woody brown background with the flavor name prominently displayed and the Gifford's logo almost an afterthought. The new packaging has a cleaner, brighter, more colorful look and feel with the logo in a more prominent position.

In 2021, the branding on the packaging went from this (L) to this (R):

Why we like Giffords as a case study

Giffords makes an interesting corporate case study as a family-run company that started small in Maine but has since grown and aspires to greater national growth. They are different from some of their larger corporate counterparts in that their story does not highlight advocate or steward messaging. Though they do reference their longstanding Maine roots and Maine ingredients, and they clearly position themselves with an albeit more subdued marketing connection to New England.

Case #11: Stonyfield Organic

40-year-old, entrepreneur-founded New Hampshire company propelled to a national brand focusing on organic yogurt and advocacy.

Stonyfield.com

QUICK FACTS
Products	Yogurt, milk, cream, frozen yogurt, yogurt smoothies
Ownership	Corporate owned
Staff Size	Large
Marketing staff size	N/A
Facebook followers	507,000
Instagram followers	35,600

BRANDING NOTES: Small-time New Hampshire yogurt start-up company is now a huge national corporate/advocate brand with a professional website and marketing. It maintains its friendly and folksy look and feel along with passionate support for the original mission of working for “healthy food, healthy people, and healthy planet” and being “obsessively organic.”

Who they are (their story)

Stonyfield Farm was founded in 1983 by co-founders Samuel Kaymen and Gary Hirshberg who were running a nonprofit organic farming school on a small New Hampshire farm. Their goals were to help family farms survive, keep food and food production healthy, and help protect the environment. To raise funds for the school, they began to produce organic yogurt from the milk of the school’s seven cows. The yogurt was so popular they turned their attention to creating a yogurt business instead of running the school, realizing they could make a bigger difference for the environment, family farms, and people that way.

Today, Stonyfield organic yogurts, smoothies, frozen yogurts, milk, and cream are sold in supermarkets, natural food stores and colleges across the country. It is all organic and made without the use of toxic persistent pesticides, artificial hormones, antibiotics, or GMOs. Stonyfield’s tagline, “Good on Purpose,” is an example of how a (now) large corporation uses its power to advocate.

Stonyfield remains in New Hampshire and their organic ingredient purchases support a huge network of food producers made up of hundreds of organic family farms, thousands of organic cows, and over 200,000 organic acres.

What they want to be (aspiration)

Stonyfield is a certified B Corporation and has spent considerable time and effort to pioneer planet-friendly business practices, including offsetting their yogurt works' emissions, to making yogurt cups from plants instead of petroleum, to making their own renewable energy, and much more.

They are well-known for their environmental practices and organic ingredients and are a large supporter of organic dairy farms across New England. In addition, they have become a major player in yogurt products marketed for babies and children.

How they market their products (marketing)

They advocate

Stonyfield is an active advocate for environmental health, organic farming, and keeping small family farms in business. Their website (including their blog), social media posts, and even their packaging labels support this advocacy role. Stonyfield also asks its supporters to take action to help with these causes: co-founder Gary Hirshberg launched a new non-profit, the Northeast Organic Family Farm Partnership (NOFFP), to connect family farms, brands, government agencies and activists. Stonyfield's marketing directly asks its customers and supporters to sign the pledge promising to purchase organic products that will support organic family farms.

They connect with people

Though present and available in supermarkets all around the country, Stonyfield's strategy is to connect with people who care about their health, the environment, and supporting family farmers. Marketing to both parents who want to feed their children healthy, organic, pesticide-free food as well as marketing to the kids themselves is also important strategy, as can be seen in the huge growth of their baby and child yogurt products (YoBaby and Stonyfield Kids pouches, cups, and tubes).

They partner with other brands

Stonyfield reaches customers by partnering with other like-minded brands, such as quick-serve restaurant Panera. Panera is also known for their support of "clean" healthy foods and the environment. Stonyfield's yogurt tubes are included as a side option in Panera's kids' meals.

How they tell their story (branding)

Web site and Messaging

Stonyfield has a large section on its website describing its story and explaining the mission of the two co-founders. Building on this, a section with in-depth blog posts covers topics such as the nutrition benefits of dairy, why organic farming is important, what running a small family farm is like, and more.

Stonyfield’s website also provides helpful tips and recipes for using their products and links to their numerous social media sites. Their social media posts (including Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, Pinterest, and YouTube) back the more serious topics up, but they also have a lot of fun posts that connect back to their small origins and unpretentious, welcoming vibe.

Logo and Packaging

Stonyfield’s logo is a friendly drawing of green hills with a red barn and a blue sky. Kids’ products have kid-friendly imagery such as cartoon fruits and happy kids.

Why we like Stonyfield Organic as a case study

Stonyfield epitomizes a corporate-advocate story. If you didn’t know better, despite their growth into one of the largest yogurt companies in the country, you might continue think of them as a start-up company supporting organic farming and advocating against pesticide usage. This ethic infuses all their marketing, from the story they tell about themselves to their actions in the marketplace.

Case #12: Cabot Creamery

100-year-old Vermont-based dairy cooperative, leader among Northeast dairies with a strong advocacy agenda.

cabotcheese.coop

Products
Ownership
Staff Size
Marketing staff size
Facebook followers
Instagram followers

QUICK FACTS

Cheese, butter, yogurt, creams, cottage cheese, dips
 Cooperative
 Very large (501-1,000+)
 More than 5
 162,300
 59,800

BRANDING NOTES: Large national brand that uses local type activities – recipes, community, etc. to anchor its brand in a local feel.

Who they are (their story)

Founded in 1919 by 94 Vermont dairy farm families, Cabot Creamery is one the nation’s best-known dairy cooperatives. Today Cabot counts 800 New England dairy farmers as members and employs more than 1,000 people across four states. Cabot is now a part of the larger parent Agri-Mark Cooperative which markets dairy products under the Cabot, McAdam, and Agri-Mark brands.

Cabot has won many awards over the years and is widely known for its different varieties of cheddar cheese. It also produces creams, dips, cottage cheese, butter, and yogurt. Cabot products can be found in supermarkets nationwide. Having grown from small beginnings, they are one of the largest dairy companies in the U.S. today. It is a point of pride that Cabot was the first dairy co-operative to become a certified B Corporation. Cabot’s marketing emphasizes the structural advantages of being a co-operative: the ability to focus on creating a sustainable business that serves and prioritizes the needs of the farmer-members, community, environment, animals, and customers – instead of a pure focus on corporate profits.

How they market their products (marketing)

They are everywhere

Cabot products are found in major supermarkets across the country and can be purchased directly from Cabot's website. They also maintain a retail location in Vermont (Cabot Farmers' Store) which sells other local Vermont products in addition to Cabot's offerings.

They connect with people

According to their website, the Cabot newsletter reaches over 333,000 people direct to their inbox. They also maintain a strong presence on Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, Pinterest, YouTube, and LinkedIn.

They use their success for greater impact of their mission

Cabot looks to impact the greater community's health and well-being with website sections entitled Department of Gratitude, Healthy Us, Youthful Matters and Cooking with Kids. Cabot also publicly supports causes such as education, health, and public broadcasting, and youth scout organizations. Additionally, Cabot participates in special events, partnerships with fellow co-ops and B Corporations, and volunteering opportunities.

SURVEY: PROMOTIONAL CHANNELS
Website	✓
Facebook	✓
Instagram	✓
Twitter	✓
Pinterest	✓
YouTube	✓
Vimeo	✓
Emails/Newsletters	✓
Online ads in search engines (e.g., Google, Bing)	✓
Online banner ads on other websites	✓
Ads in online newspapers, magazines, blogs	✓
Ads in print newspapers or magazines	✓
Booths at community events/festivals	✓
Booths at food expos or trade shows	✓
Enter products into food awards competitions	✓
Sponsorship of local organizations (e.g., little league)	✓

SURVEY: SALES CHANNELS
Ecommerce on our website
Ecommerce via another independent retail website	✓
Online at large retail website (e.g., Amazon)	✓
A store on our farm or property
A store on someone else's farm	✓
Direct at local farmers markets
Our own store at a retail location	✓
Direct to local retail stores	✓
Direct to local restaurants/hotels/institutions
Direct to non-local stores in my state	✓
Direct to regional stores in the Northeast	✓
Direct to regional stores nationally	✓
Via distributor to local stores, restaurants, hotels etc.	✓
Via distributor to non-local stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in my state	✓
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. in the Northeast	✓
Via distributor to stores, restaurants, hotels etc. nationally	✓
Home delivery using our own vehicles

SURVEY: AGRITOURISM
Offer tours of processing facility
Have a store on the farm
Have lodging for guests (e.g., bed and breakfast)	✓
Part of a "farm/dairy trail" type offering	✓
Guests can participate in processing products
Dedicated tasting opportunity on site	✓
Local farm to table

SURVEY: IN-HOUSE OR PROFESSIONAL?	WE DO	HIRE A PRO	DON'T DO
Logo Design	✓
Website Design	✓
Website Upkeep	✓
Packaging Design	✓
Social Media Posts	✓
Advertising	✓
Booths at Food Shows	✓
Booths at Farmers Markets	✓
Search Engine Optimization	✓

How they tell their story (branding)

Web site and story

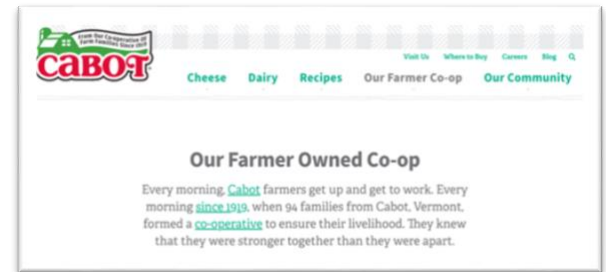

Cabot’s website is professional and extensive. The initial focus is on the cheese and other dairy products they produce and where to find them, featuring an easy-to-use product locator tool. An enormous recipe section aimed at customers of all types is organized by occasion, Cabot ingredients, cooking methods, dietary restrictions, and cuisine types.

Second only to information about its products, Cabot’s website provides in-depth write-ups highlighting their long history, the farmer-members, the features that make the co-operative model special, and the importance of its mission. Section topics include farm families, farm animals, environmental stewardship, the products, and further information about co-op structure.

The website’s blog has a heavy focus on the co-operative mission and giving back to the community. Its content is divided in five categories: Co-Operative, Food, Fun, Gratitude, and Health & Education. Recent pieces address topics such as the importance of pollinators and how to compost, a focus on women farmers, and healthy recipes.

Logo and packaging

Cabot’s logo is a nice encapsulation of their corporate-advocate story. The use of the single word “from” recalls a direct farm-to-customer transaction and the remaining text includes a mention of the co-operative structure, Cabot’s long history since 1919, and the importance of farm families. A green barn and red text with plaid accents catch the eye in a simple, traditional, New England country style.

SURVEY: WORDS THAT DESCRIBE OUR LOGO

Humorous/Funny
Serious
Realistic
Cartoonish
Fun
Friendly	✓
Vintage
Old-Fashioned
Classy
Artisan
Rustic
Botanical/floral
Natural	✓
Traditional	✓
Artistic
Clean
Simple	✓
Boutique
Modern Wholesome
Healthy

SURVEY: INTENTIONAL MARKETING MESSAGES

Our family to your family	✓
Generations of farmers	✓
We take good care of our cows/goats/sheep	✓
We take good care of the land	✓
We support the local community	✓
Small family farm
Local farm to table	✓
Fresh	✓
No antibiotics/rBGH/additives
Simple ingredients	✓
Highest quality/pure	✓
Nutritious	✓
Better tasting/delicious	✓
Local flavor or character	✓
Trusted neighbor	✓

Why we like Cabot Creamery as a case study

Cabot Creamery is one of the best-known dairy brands in the U.S. and so has options as to what story it chooses to tell. From our point of view, they tell a corporate-advocate story in its purest form; that is, they leverage their exposure to communicate an image about dairy farming that is tied to the land and tied to a cooperative and supportive of a supply chain in the form of small farms and farmers, and they position themselves as a leader in this humanistic enterprise.